Notes:

An additional piece of private study work for each modern foreign language may occasionally be set. Private study work may occasionally be set following a citizenship lesson.

Students may adjust this private study timetable to fit their own circumstances (e.g. a substantial after school commitment on a particular day) provided they can meet the task deadlines. As a general rule we advise students to undertake their private study tasks on the day they are set rather than the day before they are due.

Notes:

Art private study work will be set after one double lesson per fortnight. Drama and Music will set private study tasks as appropriate.

French and German as well as Religious Education and English lessons are timetabled on different days of the week for different students. Students studying two languages will be set private study work once each week for each language; students studying one language may be set work twice during the week. All students will be set RE work once a week.

With reference to their own individual timetables, students should personalise the above private study timetable by creating their own version below as follows:

- Identify the specific Science subjects and put "Biology", "Chemistry" and "Physics" rather than "Science".
- Put three private study slots for French and/or German and RE, and two slots for English.
- Ensure an even distribution of work throughout the week (usually three tasks per night). Students cannot change the days on which work is set or due, but can opt to do the work on any evening. It is generally advisable to do the tasks as soon as possible after they have been set, to ensure that teacher help can be sought if a student is unsure about a specific task.
- Check: You should have 15 private study slots in total.
